

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The topic of this book, firm relocation, is somehow linked to the way I lived in the last years of my life. I have stayed in my hometown – La Spezia, a small city by a wonderful sea in the north of Italy – until I was nineteen. Then, I moved to Genoa to attend university and after I went to the UK for a Master course in Regional Science in Reading. One year later I was in Groningen for my PhD and now I am back to Italy – but in a different city, Milan. So, perhaps it is my destiny to deal with ‘things’ in movement!

Among the numerous people I feel grateful to, I want to start with those who helped me in approaching regional science and made me love the topic: Philip McCann, Ian Gordon, Graham Crampton and Alan Evans, my teachers in Reading. I thank them for this. However, their teaching would have been useless without the support of other friends in England: Abi, who was like a mother for us MSc students; Alessandra, who helped me a lot; my house-mates Nectaria from Athens, Fred from Bordeaux and Montserrat from Zaragoza; all my friends in Reading. To be honest, when I was told about the possibility to do a PhD in Groningen, I had no clue of where it was ... But then I loved it! I want to thank all my Dutch, German, Indian, Bangladesh, American, Turkish, Bulgarian, Czech, Japanese colleagues and friends in Groningen. A warm thank goes to my roommate Aleid, who has always been so friendly, sweet and helpful with me; to my Dutch family: Bettina, Olaf and Georgie; to my dear friends Padma and Ruud; to my sailing friends Carola and Mark; to my ‘cara amica’ Monica.

Of course, a very special thank to my supervisor Piet Pellenbarg, who always encouraged me since the beginning and read and commented everything I wrote. I need to show my appreciation to the Reading Committee for the fruitful comments and suggestions made on the preliminary version of the thesis. Thanks to all the scholars I met at the conferences I attended in these years and gave me good feedbacks and interesting ideas to work on. Sincere thanks to Tamara for drawing the maps and to Dorina, Didi, Stiny, Miranda for their help during the four years.

I am indebted to Luca Bianchi and Stefano Prezioso of SVIMEZ, who helped me in analysing the Italian case, as well as to Gianfranco Viesti, Anna Giunta and Simona Iammarino. Thanks to Jeroen Westendorp and Ykje Vriesinga for the assistance on the Dutch case; to Geoff Hamby of Prism Research in Telford for the British case.

Thanks also to my Italian friends for their e-support and in particular for those who sometimes came to visit me abroad (phone calls are fine, but real hugs are better). Some of them worked hard on the technicalities of the production of the thesis: my dear Rossana, who revised the draft versions, and Giovanni, the designer of the cover. I cannot forget my new colleagues at the Politecnico of Milan, for allowing me to finish this book. Finally, sincere thanks to my friends of the research centre Avanzi, which hosted me in the period I have been working in Italy.

Of course, all this has been possible thanks to the support of my husband Davide, who became an expert in this topic, and to my family, including the youngest members (Ilaria, Marcella, Giorgio and Eros).

Ilaria,
